Appendix 1. List of religious and topographical maps of Banaras

This list gives the available data of the different kinds of religious and topographical maps of Banaras that have been found in published and unpublished sources. As indicated in the brief overview in the introduction the entries are sorted into five categories: a.) pictorial maps, b.) printed religious maps, c.) charts, d.) panoramas, and e.) topographical maps and plans. Within these categories similar maps are listed in approximately chronological sequence.

A general identification number that serves as reference in the present publication is given in the first row. Numbers of the catalogue of the Banaras Archives (BA) are added where available. They refer to the Descriptive Catalogue of mainly Visual Material on Varanasi kept in the Banaras Archives of the South Asia Institute edited by Jörg Gengnagel and Birgit Mayer-König, published in 2003 on the internet (<http://www.benares.uni-hd.de/ben-archive.pdf>).

While searching for religious and topographical maps of Banaras it was a striking experience that unpublished and uncatalogued material was discovered by mere chance and at unexpected times and places. Other documented sources were not accessible and the given data could therefore not be verified. This should alert the reader that the present list is only preliminary and far from being exhaustive.

Appendix 2. Processions According to Kedarnāth Vyās

No consistent numbering system of any of the analysed processions has been found in the field or in the textual sources that have been studied.¹ I therefore have opted not to create a new set of seemingly authoritative lists but to refer as a reference tool to an already existing compilation.

Kedarnāth Vyās' book (Vyās 1987) includes a list of 57 processions performed within the territory of Banaras. In quantity and enumerations of localisations these lists are the most detailed I am aware of. The author is a member of the Vyās family that lives in the Viśvanātha temple area near the well Jñānavāpī. In the vicinity, at the Vyāspīṭh, pilgrims take the vow to perform a pilgrimage and they return to this place after this vow is fulfilled. A member of the Vyās family is reciting this formal declaration (saṃkalpa) and enumerates the names of places to be visited at the beginning and the end of each procession. The lists of places given in Vyās' book and their localisation reflects the performance of pilgrimages in Banaras in the 20th century and bases itself on pilgrimage practice, textual sources as well as on the immense spatial knowledge of the Vyās family.²

Listed below are the names of the 57 processions that are described by Vyās. This is followed by a detailed list of seven processions that are of central importance for the present study and the spatial structure of the religious topography of Banaras. I would like to thank Michaela Dimmers who has taken great care to transcribe a draft version of this list.

Appendix 3. List of Names and Places Indicated on the Analyzed Historical Maps

This general index lists in alphabetical order the names of temples, gods, water-places etc. given on the maps Kāśīdarpaṇa of Kailāsanātha Sukula (S), Saptapurī-yātrādīprakāśapatra by Bahadūr Siṃha (B), the Stylised map of Vārāṇasī at the Victoria & Albert Museum in London (V) and Pilgrims in Banaras at the National Museum in Delhi (De). The entry of the names is followed by variants and textual references. These references are based on the electronic indices of four texts: the Kāśīkhaṇḍa (KKh), the Tīrthavivecanakāṇḍa (TVK), the Kāśīrahasya (KR) and the Pañcakrośīvidhāna (PKV) and are therefore not exhaustive. Where possible, the localisations of the indicated names as well as their respective position in the sequence of the listed processions within Banaras is indicated. These informations are based on the electronic index “Processions in Banaras as given in Kāśīkhaṇḍokta Pañcakrośātmaka Jyotirliṅga Kāśī Māhātmya by Paṇḍit Kedārnāth Vyās (Vārāṇasī 1987)” prepared by Michaela Dimmers and the author (Dimmers & Gengnagel 2003). All the mentioned electronic indices have been prepared at the Department of Classical Indology of the South Asia Institute, Heidelberg. As additional source the file “Varanasi/Kashi: Pilgrimage Circuits & Sacred Journeys” prepared by Prof. Rāna P. B. Singh in December 1999 and January 2001 has been consulted.
