Please note: According to an official Chinese version of "The Organizational Structure of the State Council (www.china.org.cn/chinese/MATERIAL/204878.htm, visited: 10 Sep 03), the newly established State Asset Management Commission is an ad hoc organization directly under the State Council (guowuyuan zhishu teshe jigou), whereas the also newly established China Banking Regulatory and Management Commission and the China Securities Regulatory Commission are institutions directly under the State Council (guowuyuan zhishu shiye danwei), like the China Insurance Regulatory Commission. The English version puts the Asset Management Commission together with the Banking Regulatory and Management Commission under the "Institutions". The Chinese version lists 18 organizations directly under the State Council (English version: 17) and adds the State Administration for Supervising Production Safety. Both versions list 14 institutions directly under the State Council, but the Chinese version lists the State Electricity Regulatory Commission instead of the Asset Management Commission in the English version.

The South-to-North Water Diversion Project Commission was established with former vice-minister of water resources Zhang Jiyao as its chairman. (Xinhua, 9 Sep 03, in BBC PF, 11 Sep 03)

Administrative Approval Law of the People's Republic of China (PRC Law of Administrative Licences), adopted at the 4th meeting of the Standing Committee of the 10th NPC on 27 August. This law will take effect on 1 July 2004. (Presidential Decree No. 7, signed by President Hu Jintao on 27 August 2003) (Xinhua, 27 Aug 03, in BBC PF, 28 Aug 03)

The meeting adopted the law, with 151 votes for, zero vote against, and one abstention. (Xinhua, 27 Aug 03, in BBC PF, 29 Aug 03) (Full text and translation: RMRB, 28 Aug 03; Xinhua, 27 Aug 03, in BBC PF, 10 Sep 03)

The "PRC Law of Administrative Licences", which is divided into eight chapters with 83 articles, has provided regulations for governing administrative licences in terms of its establishment, enforcement organs, enforcement procedures, charges, supervision and inspection, and legal obligations. In the General Principles, the law made its purpose and theme clear, stating: This law is aimed at standardizing administrative licences in terms of its establishment and enforcement, at protecting the legitimate rights and interests of citizens, legal persons, and other organizations, at safeguarding the interests of the public and social order, and at securing and supervising administrative organs' effective administrative management.

The Law of Administrative Licences stipulates that administrative licences be established in relation to activities in the following six areas: specialized activities directly involving national security, public security, macroeconomic regulation and control, and ecological environment protection; specialized activities directly involving the health and the safety of life and property of people; activities to be approved in line with the statutory regulations; activities involving the exploitation and utilization of limited natural resources, including the disposal of public resources; activities involving market access for designated trades and professions, which may directly involve the interests of the public; and activities involving the granting of specialized rights and interests. The Law of Administrative Licences states in no uncertain terms: Except where otherwise mentioned in various laws or administrative decrees, administrative organs shall be prohibited from levying charges while enforcing administrative licences or supervising or inspecting administrative license-related activities. Administrative organs shall provide application forms for administrative licences free of charge. (ZXS, 27 Aug 03, in BBC PF, 28 Aug 03)

A new law enacted by China's legislature aims to remove much of the red tape associated with running a business, and remove numerous opportunities for corrupt officials to make money from issuing licenses and franchise rights. The NPC Standing Committee adopted a law on administrative licenses on 27 August, which embodies the principle of rigorously restricting the power of government bodies and will facilitate the country's uphill battle against corruption. The new law covering the government's right to grant franchises, permits or certificates to businesses and individuals "will have an unprecedented impact on the relations between government bodies and common citizens," Prof. Ying Songnian said in an interview with Xinhua. Prof. Ying, a member of the NPC Civil Affairs Committee and dean of the Department of Law of the State Administrative College, helped write the draft's first version. The State Council, or the Chinese cabinet, has found that its commissions and ministries used to empower themselves with a total of 3,000 rights in granting franchises or permits. ... Prof. Ying noted that government officials had found the right to granting franchises and permits very profitable for their departments, and themselves. "Government bodies are enthusiastic about expanding their power because they can collect fees from those who want the franchises or permits, and this is a major source of government corruption," Ying said. ... Prof. Ying went on to say that the State Council launched its massive reform measures in 2001 after it discovered a large number of problems in a survey for the legislation. So far, commissions and ministries of the State Council have given up rights to administer 1,195 franchise rights, and handed 82 items to industrial associations and other intermediate agencies. ... Under the new law, commissions and ministries of the State Council will no longer have the right to empower themselves with franchising rights, and fee collection practices will be abandoned. A vital feature of the new law highlights "higher efficiency and convenience for ordinary common people," said Wang Yongqing, deputy director of the Legislative Affairs Office of the State Council. The law simplifies the procedures for administrative licenses and abolishes unnecessary restrictions against applicants, and makes the government administration the last option only after all other means have failed. A government license should only be required by a citizen if his business is related to national or economic security, public interest, personal rights and property of other citizens, exploitation of rare natural resources and the distribution of limited public resources, according to the law. To avoid the misuse of power by government bodies, franchises for the distribution of limited resources should be granted through bidding, auction or competition, it notes. The law says that the people who want to start a business or other enterprise will be required to go to far fewer government agencies for approval. Even if approval from different government bodies is required to get one thing done, for instance opening a restaurant, these bodies may also set up a special office dealing with restaurant certification so applicants do not have to go to different places. "We shouldn't cost people too much effort, time and money, even if it means more work for the government," said Wang Yongqing. Such stipulations are also in compliance with the rules of the World Trade Organization and are needed by China in accommodating itself to an ever more globalized economic structure, he acknowledged.

The Chinese leadership has declared that "power should be used for the people, passion should be tied to the people and interests should be sought for the people." The new legislation can be seen as a new landmark for the Chinese leadership in enforcing its political manifesto, legal experts say. (XNA, 27 Aug 03)

The Patterns for Customs Official Rank Badges and Methods of Wearing Them, approved at the 14th executive meeting of the State Council on 8 July 2003. The Patterns take effect upon promulgation. Regulations on the Management of the Employment of Doctors in the Countryside, adopted at the 16th executive meeting of the State Council on 30 July 2003. The Regulations will be implemented starting 1 January 2004. (Decree No. 386 of the State Council, signed by Premier Wen Jiabao on 5 August 2003) (Full text: RMRB, 19 Aug 03)

The "Regulations" are divided into six chapters and 49 articles, including the general principles, licensing and registration, rules for practising the profession, training and examinations, legal responsibilities, and appendices.

The objectives in implementing these regulations are to raise the professional ethics as well as professional qualifications of the doctors in the countryside, step up the management of the employment of doctors in the countryside, protect the legitimate rights of rural doctors, as well as ensure that the villagers receive basic health care and medical services.

According to the regulations, qualified medical educational institutions should carry out medical education and courses that meet the needs of the countryside in line with the relevant regulations of the state and train appropriate medical personnel for the countryside. The state encourages rural doctors to study and learn the basic knowledge on Chinese traditional medicine and apply Chinese traditional medicine and techniques in the treatment and prevention of diseases. It encourages rural doctors to acquire professional medical qualifications through education on the medical sciences. It encourages qualified rural doctors to apply to take the state licensing examinations for the accreditation of medical doctors. It encourages medical personnel who have been accredited as practising doctors or practising doctor's assistants to set up village medical and health care facilities or to offer preventative medicine, health care and medical services to the villagers through rural medical and health care institutions. (Xinhua, 17 Aug 03, in BBC PF, 19 Aug 03)

China's 800 million rural residents are going to enjoy a better primary health service under a newly adopted administrative regulation on the management of medical practitioners in the nation's vast countryside. All country doctors now must apply for a certificate, valid for five years, to practice medicine, which means some farmers with a knowledge of medicine taking on part-time jobs as doctors will have to get a professional education under the new regulations, China Daily reported on 18 August. The regulation aims to improve the professional skills and ethics of country doctors, enhance the management of medical practitioners, protect the legitimate interests and rights of rural doctors, and ensure that villagers have full access to primary medical care. The rural population accounts for the vast majority of the nation's almost 1.3 billion people, according to the latest census conducted in 2001. Nevertheless, according to the Chinese Ministry of Health, there were just over one-million-strong country doctors in China at the end of 2001 and more than 33 percent of them were over 46 years old. Regulations on Marriage Registration, adopted at the 16th executive meeting of the State Council on 30 July 2003. The Regulations will take effect on 1 October 2003. (Decree No. 387 of the State Council, signed by Premier Wen Jiabao on 8 August 2003) (Full text: RMRB, 19 Aug 03)

The "Marital Registration Regulations" are divided into a total of 22 articles in six chapters, namely the General Provisions, Marriage Registration, Divorce Registration, Marital Registration Archives and Marital Registration Certificates, Penalty Provisions, and Supplementary Provisions.

The "General Provisions" make clear the purpose of drawing up the Regulations; organs handling inland residents' marital registrations; organs handling marital registrations between Chinese citizens and foreigners and between inland residents and Hong Kong residents, Macau residents, Taiwan residents, and overseas Chinese; requirements of marital registration organs' marital registrars; and others.

"Marriage Registration" mainly lays down credentials and supporting material that shall be produced by inland residents as well as Hong Kong, Macau, and Taiwan residents when getting a marriage registered; the circumstances where a marital registration organ shall make a registration and issue a certificate of marriage on the spot or shall not make a registration; supporting material that shall be produced when asking for a marriage to be annulled; and others.

"Divorce Registration" lays down credentials and supporting material that shall be produced by inland residents as well as Hong Kong residents, Macau residents, Taiwan residents, overseas Chinese, and foreigners when getting a divorce registered; the three situations where a marital registration organ shall not accept and handle an application; and others.

"Marital Registration Archives and Marital Registration Certificates" provides: A marital registration organ shall set up marital registration archives; the person concerned may apply for the replacement of a certificate of marriage or certificate of divorce lost or damaged.

The "Penalty Provisions" provide: Where a marital registration organ and its marital registrar commit such acts as handling a marital registration in violation of the rules and collecting illegal fees, the directly responsible person-in-charge and other personnel with direct responsibility will be subjected to administrative disciplinary measures in accordance with the law.

The "Supplementary Provisions" provide for these Regulations to come into force as of 1 October 2003. (Xinhua, 18 Aug 03, in BBC PF, 19 Aug 03)

Chinese couples planning to get married may soon do so without a letter from their employers testifying to their unmarried status and without first having a health examination, according to a new regulation issued by the State Council on 18 August. The regulation, to take effect Oct. 1, consists of six chapters, or 22 items, which will annul the old version that was in effect for nine years. An adult male and female will be able to marry each other legally by only providing their ID cards and residence documents, and by signing a statement that they are single and not related, the new regulation said. For the past several decades, government marriage offices required people to show letters provided by their employers to guarantee that they were qualified for marriage. The new regulation says that people may take a health examination before marriage, but will not be forced to do so. The marriage will be invalidated if one of the partners is shown to have a medical condition which, under the law would disqualify a marriage, such as leprosy or insanity. One of the partners may apply for an annulment if the other suffers from such a disease before marriage and does not recover after. The new rules stress that couples without legal registration will not have their rights and interests protected by the law. Couples will receive divorce certificates at once if they both agree to get divorced and settle amicably their property, any debts and care of any children, the new rules say. The number of Chinese registering for marriage decreased from 8.916 million couples in 1998 to 7.86 million last year, according to the All-China Women's Federation. The number of divorces has remained stable in the past five years, at about 1.2 million each year. However, experts here noted that in some remote villages couples still regard a traditional wedding party as sufficient to qualify couples for marriage instead of legal registration, and in some places poor people can not afford to get married formally due to illegal charges imposed by government offices. The people of China will have greater freedom to choose where they live under new rules of residency registration announced by the Ministry of Public Security on 7 August. The seven new measures are expected to encourage college and university graduates to live and work in underdeveloped western China, as they will have the choice of registering their residence either in the region where they work or back to their original domicile. China is among the few countries that practices residency registration, which requires people to transfer their registered residence whenever they change their permanent residence. The new measures abolish the requirement for investors, entrepreneurs and skilled workers in western regions to re-register their residence. Those who have already re-registered may return their registration to their original home if they return to work or live. Professional workers who have registered in large or medium-sized cities but work in comparatively small towns may keep their registered residence. The permanent residence of newborn babies can be registered in the place of either the father or mother in accordance with the decision of their parents. Those who leave the country for more than a year, with the exception of those having permanent residence abroad, no longer have to cancel their registered residence. The new measures also scrap the requirement to cancel the registered residence of convicted criminals who are imprisoned or sentenced to labor education and rehabilitation. (XNA, 7 Aug 03; RMRB, 8 Aug 03)

Chinese citizens will enjoy more convenience and freedom in residence registry, driving and passport application, thanks to a series of measures introduced on 7 August by China's Ministry of Public Security. ... Many senior or disabled people will be able to realize their dreams of driving with the new measures. According to the ministry's circular, the maximum age limit for people applying for driving licenses will be extended to 70 years from the current 60 years on 1 September. Driving license holders who are above the age of 70 may continue driving if they pass an annual driving examination and physical check-up, the circular said. The new measures also permit "persons with a disabled lower left limb" to take the examination and obtain driving licenses for small cars with automatic transmission. In addition, Chinese residents will find it easier to apply for a passport. So far only residents in 25 big Chinese cities can apply for passports on proof of need, with ID cards and residence booklets. People in other cities still have to complete complicated paperwork when filing an application. According to the new measures, the ministry will simplify passport application procedure in as many as 100 large and medium-sized cities by the end of this year. (XNA, 7 Aug 03)

Regulations on Rewards for Public Security Organs and People's Police. Zhou Yongkang, minister of public security, member of the CCP CC Politburo and Secretariat and state councillor, recently signed the No. 66 Order of the Ministry of Public Security. (Xinhua, 3 Aug 03, in BBC PF, 20 Aug 03; RMRB, 4 Aug 03)

Regulations on Administration of Printed Publications are to take effect on 1 September this year, according to China Press and Publishing Journal. Shi Zongyuan, director of the State Press and Publication Administration, and Zhou Yongkang, minister of public security, have signed an order to make public and implement the regulation, according to the 13 August edition of the paper. The regulation is designed to regulate China's printing sector and facilitate its development since it opened to overseas investment after China joined the World Trade Organization. The regulation, including seven chapters and 26 articles, deals with printing license verification, registration of printed matter, publication storage and delivery and inferior publication disposal. China's printing industry has seen a rapid development in recent years, but still lags behind developed countries due to poor management and disorderly competition, the officials said. The current presswork consumption per person in China is only around 35 US$ (290.5 RMBY) compared to hundreds of US$ per capita in some developed countries. (XNA, 16 Aug 03)

Regulations on Administration of Central Reserve Grains, adopted at the State Council executive meeting on 6 August 2003. (Decree No. 388 of the State Council, signed by Premier Wen Jiabao) These provisions consist of seven chapters with 60 articles. (RMRB, 29 Aug 03)

became effective on 6 August, are designed to safeguard the grain reserve's quality and safety, farmers' interests and a stable grain market as well as to enhance the reserve's macro adjustment role. The grain reserve includes grain and cooking oil kept by the central government and is mainly used for ensuring grain supply and for serious natural disasters and other major accidents, according to the regulation. Organizations and individuals are forbidden to use the reserve without permission from the central government. The country will annually rotate 20 to 30 percent of its total central grain reserve based on domestic supply and demand. The State Council can also use the grain reserve when it considers necessary. The regulation also urges establishing an early alert system and strengthening the monitoring of the central grain reserve use. With the help of the regulation, China can effectively keep its domestic grain markets from imbalance by preventing speculation, analysts say. (XNA, 27 Aug 03)

The Chinese government has issued new regulations to improve the safety of fish farm products and to help protect the environment. The new regulations, involving every aspect of aquatic cultivation, including water, cultivators, fries, and medicine for fishery use, would come into effect on 1 September, said Zhang Hecheng, deputy director in charge of fishery industry in the Ministry of Agriculture. The regulation states clearly that the water quality of the cultivation ponds should reach set standards and requires fish farmers to be licensed. It also requires farmers to keep records of the major steps in the cultivation procedure, such as the source of fries, quarantine situations, feed, fish illnesses and treatment. Varieties and quantities of medicines are clearly specified and farmers are required to keep detailed records of medical treatments, which should be kept for at least two years after the aquatic products have gone on to market. China's fishery cultivation output accounts for two thirds of the world's total. In late 2002, China had 6.81 million hectares of fishery cultivation ponds, producing 29.07 million tons of aquatics. Zhang noted that though China's fishery industry had developed rapidly in recent years, problems such as product safety and the deteriorating environment had hindered its further development. Some local governments extended to some extent the scale of fishery cultivation irrationally, neglecting the capacity of the environment, which caused occasional illnesses among stock and affect the environment, he acknowledged. Regulations on Legal Aid will take effect on 1 September. (See C.a., 2003/7, p.914/28)

The Chinese government will be committed to the obligation of providing legal aid for the needy and minorities, as a new regulation concerning legal assistance takes effect on Sept. 1. The new regulation will, for the first time, develop the legal aid from benevolent practices of individual lawyers or social organizations into a duty of governments, said Minister of Justice Zhang Fusen on 28 August. The Chinese government will not only strive to create better policies and social environment for legal assistance development, but also guarantee the funds needed for daily operation of legal aid organizations, which are banned from seeking profits, Zhang said. Meanwhile, judicial authorities at various levels are also impelled to strengthen supervision and management over the operation of legal assistance organizations, Zhang said. ... The Chinese government invested 78.04m RMBY (9.44m US$) in legal assistance to needy citizens last year. Currently, China has 2,642 legal aid organizations with 8, 899 full-time practitioners. CPI (A), CPI(B) and CPI(C) are compiled based on the expenditure patterns of households in the relatively low, medium and relatively high expenditure ranges respectively. A Composite CPI is compiled based on the overall expenditure pattern of all the above households taken together. The CPI(C) was formerly known as the Hang Seng CPI and was compiled by the Hang Seng Bank since 1974. Starting from the reference month of July 1999, the data collection and compilation work of the index have been taken up by the Census and Statistics Department and the index has been renamed as CPI(C).
