

Until 1978 the experimental fish farming station was established in Uda-Walave (1). One of the station's successes was the artificial spawning of Chinese grass carp (5); more than 200,000 fry were produced. A successful artificial hatching of the Chinese "Big Head" fish produced 284,000 fingerlings which later were raised in rivers, lakes and reservoirs (6). In 1977 twelve pisciculturists went to China under a UNDP-FAO project for training in inland water fisheries (7). Under a new contract of February 1982, the station is to be expanded (1). A contract for the establishment of a joint China-Sri Lanka fisheries company was signed in Colombo on 28th November. The joint venture, the Lanhua Fisheries Company, will operate in Sri Lanka in the fields of marine fishing, marine product processing and culture of fish and prawns for local marketing and export. The contributions to the company's capital by the two parties to the contract, the Ceylon Fisheries Corporation of Sri Lanka and the China International Engineering Corporation for Agriculture, Livestock and Fisheries, are 51% and 49% respectively. The creation of the joint venture was preceded by a field survey carried out by the Chinese party on the fisheries resources in Sri Lanka early this year (8).

Flood Control Project

In 1973 a Chinese expert group undertook a feasibility study on the Gin Ganga control project (1). The 110-km long Gin Ganga river flows in the southern part of Sri Lanka. The plain in its lower reaches was often flooded which greatly affected agricultural production (2). Construction of the project started in 1976 and was completed in September 1982. The entire project consists of over 170 items and covers an area of 200 kilometres on both banks of the river. Among the main items built are 74 bunds, 10 pumping stations, a switch centre, 21 drainage channels totalling of 33.7 kilometres, eight highway bridges and 36.6 kilometres of 33 kv transmission line (3).

Hoe Factory

Construction of a new mammoth (hoe) factory at Yakkla, some 30 km northeast of Colombo, was completed in January 1984. The Yakkla factory under the Ceylon State Hardware Corporation had not been operating normally for years due to out-dated equipment and non-maintenance. The corporation declared in August, 1981, that it would invite foreign tenders for the restructuring of the plant. Carroway Enterprises Ltd. of Hongkong won the bid with the offer of 1.69 million U.S.$ and asked the China General Electric Corporation to contract the project and undertake the responsibility of providing the equipment and carrying out installation, trial production and technical training. The installation of equipment started in May 1983 (1).

Agricultural Project

This project was envisaged in 1979. It aimed to enable cultivators to acquire training on new agricultural structure (1). It is situated in Talawa, about 200 km east of Colombo. Construction of this Malwanagama farm began in August 1982 under an agreement signed between the governments earlier. Its aim is to introduce through demonstration Chinese agricultural techniques and cultivate improved varieties of grains for the development of Sri Lanka's agriculture. The farm now has opened up 127 acres of land apart from housing construction and the erection of necessary equipment ranging from maintenance to laboratory apparatuses. During the construction period, the farm has trial-produced three crops of rice, cotton and beans with good results.
